Passover, Egg on Seder Plate

Why do Jews have an egg on their seder plates? Does this not come from Easter?

The egg on the seder plate at Passover is a post-Second Temple Rabbinical addition. The roasted egg or beitzah, in various Jewish traditions, symbolizes the hardness of Pharaoh's heart. We would speculate that after the destruction of the Temple and the Dispersion of the Jewish people from the Land of Israel, new traditions were added to Passover to compensate for the loss of no longer observing it in the appointed place. New debates likely arose as Jews were spread abroad into many places where they had never lived before. As additions to the seder arose, eggs were probably an item which all Jewish communities could agree were "kosher for Passover," and the custom of having a roasted egg on the seder plate was instituted.

The inclusion of eggs at Easter time is a debated practice in Christianity. No one is entirely certain how they came about, although it is frequently suggested that they stem from some kind of Babylonian fertility rite.¹ However, people do not all of a sudden stop eating eggs simply because pagans may have used them in their worship. Similarly, because the Jewish community employs an egg on the seder plate during Passover, we cannot all of a sudden make the judgment that they borrowed it "from Easter." There is always an alternative view which frequently eludes those who are out on an "egg witch hunt."
